Andrew Knack's Post

Andrew Knack
January 3 at 10:20 AM ·

Last month, Edmonton saw 416% more precipitation than our 30-year average — making it the sixth snowiest December on record.

And yes, we're all feeling it.

Over the past few weeks, I've heard from many Edmontonians - by phone, in person, and here on social media - about snow clearing and staying safe on our roads.

I want you to know that the City of Edmonton takes safety seriously. I've been in regular contact with the City Manager and continue to receive updates on snow removal during this exceptionally snowy period.

I would like to thank Edmontonians who have been doing their part, I know this has been challenging, especially over the holiday period. I'd also like to thank our snow team who have been working 24/7 to help keep us moving.

I've compiled the most common questions I've received from residents with some explanations and what you can expect to see in regard to our snow clearing approach which you can read through the link below.

ANDREWKNACK.SUBSTACK.COM

Navigating an Unprecedented Winter: What You Need to Know About Snow Clearing in Edmonton

625 408 comments 87 shares

Like Share

Only people who follow this Page for more than 24 hours can comment.

Most relevant

Wade McEwan
Good thing the bike lanes have been cleared.

2w Haha 113

View all 24 replies

Blair Sehested
As someone who does commercial snow removal, with this much snow over several weeks, fatigue becomes a factor! We've been working long hours non stop since the first major storm hit in the middle of December and we are getting burnt out! Keep up the good work Edmonton!

2w Like 62

Andrew Knack replied · 4 Replies

Michele Johnson
Thank you for ploughing the bike lanes. It was brought to my attention that people who don't have vehicles, and people with little supports, in other words, 'poor' people, use the bike lanes, as well as regular cyclists. That changed my mindset. Growth and change can be hard, but it's doable.

2w Like 40